Gathering in Baltimore on Tuesday Will Be Twenty-First for Democrats.

JACKSON FIRST NOMINEE

Two-Thirds Rule for Naming of Candidate an Inviolable Rule.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Washington, June 22.—When the Democratic convention is opened Tuesday in Baltimore the twenty-first such gathering will be at hand. It's a long time back to 1882, when the first convention was held, and it, too, in Baltimore, and momentous have been the years which have followed.

Ever since the first convention was held there have been two inviolable held there have been two inviolable rules in the party—that the delegates, when so instructed, should cast the votes of their States as a unit, and the other that no candidate should be nominated without a two-thirds majority. These rules have always been solemnly adhered to. In the year of the first convention Andrew Jackson, "Old Hickory," was nominated and elected President and Martin Van Buren Vice-President.

Baltimore also had the second convention, held in 1836, and that year Van Buren was elected President and Richard M. Johnson Vice-President.

icipal meetings for the week have sheduled as follows:

Sheduled as follows:

Taylor and Filmore, Whigs, defeated to clock; Committee on Printing and the Gass and Butler ticket in 1818, that convention being characterized by some left of the Poor and Finance at 5 st. John's Burial Ground at s

William P. King, of Alabama, as his running mate.

Up to the time of the convention of 1856 all such gatherings had been held in Baltimore, but in the year named Chichnati was the city chosen for the meeting. Four days were spent in the selection of candidates, the result being that James Buchanan was brought to the front for first place on the ticket and John C. Breckinridge for second place.

But perhaps the most intensely exciting of all such meetings was that held at Charleston in April, 1860, just before the booming of the big guns of Fort Sunter began. Ten days were spent in the selection of candidates, and nearly sixty ballots were taken, with the result that nothing was accomplished, the convention epiliting into two parts, one section purting up Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, and Herchel V. Johnson, of Goorgia, and the one other Breedinridge for President and Joseph Lane, of Orogon, for Vice-President. Both tickets were defeated by the Lincoin-Hamilin ticket. Chiesgo had the convention of 1864, at which time all efforts were being made to hold the party and keep it from being smashed to pieces because of the Civil War, then raging in all its fury. George H. McCiellan, of New Jorsey, and George H. Pendleton, of Ohie, for first and second place, respectively, saw what remained of the party so down to defeat.

In 1865, when the convention was held in New York, the Seymour-Blair ticket was put in the field, it being the beilef of the party leaders that a combination of New York and Missouri men might meet with success, but this was not to be, and the ticket met defeat at the hands of Grant and Colfas.

Ballimore again came to the frent in 1812, when the convention

About one dozen to be sold at 1812, when the convention of that year was held in the Monumental City. Horace Greeley and Gratz Erown skain saw the ticket defeated by the regular Republican organization.

Tilden and Hendricks led the Democrats at St. Louis in 1876 and came within a stone's throw of success.
Since that time the nominees have been Hancock and English, at Cincinnail in 1886; Cleveland and Hendricks, at Chicago in 1881; Cleveland and Thurman, at New York in 1888;
Cleveland and Stevenson, at Chicago in 1892, Bryan and Sewell, at Chicago
